I would like to express my concerns regarding the decision not to hold fireworks for New Year's Eve in Vancouver. Many cities around the world, including those in Muslim-majority countries like Dubai and Saudi Arabia, celebrate this occasion with spectacular displays, while our city missed out on this festive tradition. I understand that you and your family may have had the opportunity to celebrate in a warm and enjoyable environment during the holiday. However, I must emphasize that many residents are struggling to make ends meet in this expensive city. For many, the focus is solely on securing basic necessities such as food and shelter. Additionally, the mental health crisis in Vancouver is alarming. Many individuals are suffering, and unfortunately, some have tragically taken their own lives. I urge you to investigate the extent of this issue and consider how such decisions impact the community's well-being. It is disheartening to see a lack of initiatives that bring joy and entertainment to our city. As taxpayers, we expect better infrastructure, public services, and healthcare. Many residents feel neglected and overwhelmed by financial burdens, which diminishes their quality of life. We all need moments of joy and celebration to foster a sense of community. I hope you will reconsider the importance of such events in enhancing the livability and spirit of Vancouver. Thank you for your attention to these concerns.	Nadia So	Downtown
